Democrats Long for Nonrunners of '88

By E.J. Dionne Jr.
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Twice last week, important Democrats gathered to discuss politics and listen to senators who most of those present thought would make excellent presidents.

There was only one problem: In each case, the man in question - Senator Sam Nunn of Georgia, the center of attention at a meeting of the Democratic Leadership Council in Atlanta, and Senator Bill Bradley of New Jersey, who was jovially roasted at a fund-raising dinner in Washington — was not running for president at all. And Mr. Bradley, at least, says he is absolutely, positively certain he will not run in 1988. Among the most unusual aspects of the 1988 presidential contest, already off to an early rocky start, is a longing for the candidate who is

The actual candidates, especially on the Democratic side, are well aware of, and somewhat annoyed at, the interest being generated by those on the sidelines. At the event featuring Mr. Bradley, a benefit

A Subtle, Slow Form of Pool to Wile Away the Day

The game's name, too, has a military origin. In the late 19th century, a first-year cadet at the Royal Military Academy was called a snooker, which was probably a variant of "snoke," meaning to sneak about. According to legend,

Chamberlain called a fellow player a snooker after a particularly poor sbot. The players agreed they were all inept at the new game, so

Finding an apartment is no easy task for people who cannot afford rents in the "free sector," or the unregulated segment of the market that begins at about 700 guilders

Apartmeots are rarely found tbrough newspaper advertisements, as in other countries. Instead, people can join nonprofit housing associations or visit the municipal housing office and apply for an urgency certificate. In both cases, they can expect a long wait.

It was the light from a giant exploding star, a supernova, whose discovery has dominated the atten-

The Candidates on SDI

Republican 'Theology'

SDI, the Strategic Defense Initiative announced by President Reagan in 1983, is one issue that separates the presidential candidates of the two parties. The Republicans say they are for it, the Democrats say they are against. But there are differences of ouance and detail between the candidates that could end up making a difference in the next administration

For the Republicans, SDI is a theological issue: The candidates are trying not so much to persuade those who are ignorant or uncertain as they are to prove to true believers that their faith is stronger and purer than any rival's. So they argue about who loves space defense most - though, fortunately, they do not succumb to the temptatioo that has afflicted the president of describing SDI as a leak-proof defense against every missile aimed at the United States.

Alexander Haig, the former secretary of state, favors research on SDI, but thinks that full protection of populations is at least 15 years away. The Reverend Pat Robertson favors SDI, but does oot have a fully detailed position yet. Vice President George Bush says America must "shift away from offensive retaliation toward greater reliance on strategic defenses," and "must resist the anti-intellectual temptation to cut off the research, development and testing." But be admits that "we don't yet have all the answers" - in other words, we don't know whether space defense can ever work. That leaves him vulnerable to Representative Jack Kemp of New York, who has faith that it can, and urges immediate test-ing and deployment, which the administration has not yet advocated. Bob Dole, the Senate Republican leader, has led the Republicans' fight in the Senate to keep the Democrats from barring the administration from testing without further congressional approval. But he does not gush with praise for it as readily as Mr. Kemp or Pierre du Pont, the former governor of Delaware.

They speak with an optimism about SDI technology that is attractive but has not yet been vindicated by results. You get the sense that Jack Kemp and Pierre du Poat have a faith in SDI that will lead them to emphasize it in a general election and push for it in an administration more than George Bush or Bob Dole would.

Any Republican administration will probably move ahead at least with measured research, which is a good idea; the questions are whether they would go ahead with testing and deployment, the case for which is any thing but compelling, and whether they would be willing to include space defense in a negotiation. Campaign rhetoric does not give completely reliable answers to these questions, but the difference in degree of passion about the program suggests who would be more and who less likely to use SDI for bargaining purposes.

-THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Target for Democrats

If the Republicans vie to prove their faith in "SDL," the Democratic candidates vie to prove their lack of it in "star wars." Speaking (especially in dovish lowa) to andiences sus picious of every Pentagon initiative, they ridicule space defense, seldom bothering to make the serious arguments that underlie their jibes. "Our children," says Michael Dukakis, the Massachusetts governor, "don't deserve wars in space; they deserve peace on earth." Senator Joseph Biden of Delaware proclaims that "the next president will preside over 'star wars' or an arms control agreement." The Republicans argue with some ment that it was the prospect of SDI that got Moscow to the bargaining table.

"After 'Star Wars," said Bruce Babbitt, a former governor of Arizona, "is a sequel called "The Empire Strikes Back." "It doesn't make sense to build an Astrodome," says Representative Richard Gephardt of Missouri, Mr. Babbitt believes any gain in defense can be overcome by Soviet advances in offensive weapons; Mr. Gephardt believes that SDI would be so destabilizing it should not be deployed even if it works, though be doubts it will, and that SDI spending could distort the entire military budget; Senator Albert Gore of Tennessee thinks it is destabilizing, is against all testing and believes that it could be bargained away for useful concessions from the Soviets: the Reverend Jesse Jackson is against testing and deployment, and he opposes research that would have military application; Senator Paul Simon of Illinois thinks the idea is "fatally flawed."

Interestingly, none of the Democrats carries his scorn for this program to the point of shutting down research altogether. And the amount of research the Democrats talk about is not negligible. The oumbers are these: the administration recommended $5,7 billion for 1988, the Senate Armed Services Committee has voted $4.5 billion. and the House voted $3.1 billion. No one can say what such a program will produce or should cost, but our sense is that the House and the Senate are near the right place and that most of the Democratic presidential candidates are not far off.

That leaves the Democrats in a fairly reasonable place on SDI; skeptical of the boosters, properly wortied about destabili-zation, but willing to fund some considerable research and ready to bargain in return for useful concessions from the Soviets. Though you would not know it from the rhetoric, that is not far from where some of the Republicans end up on the issue too.

President Reagan and his supporters have, even more than Mr. Nixon, lusted to capture the federal judiciary for their philosophy. That may be tempered by the Democratie control of the Senate and its Judiciary Committee, which must pass on nominees. That is fortunate for moderation because the ideologues' main targets are the very "social agenda" issues on which Jus-

In Seoul, Signs of Maturity

The opposition has scored a clear victory in South Korea. Roh Tae Woo, the desigoated successor of President Chun Doo Hwan, has responded favorably to all its demands in an eight-point manifesto offered by the ruling party. Thus is born the hope that the country will come out of its grave governmental crisis and move toward something other than military dictatorship. After the great success of the peace march organized by the opposition on June 26, the government could oo longer pretend to ignore the will of the majority. After two weeks of violence, its back was against the wall. It had a choice between still more brutal repression (which Washington openly advised against), with the risk of a popular uprising which that entailed, and accepting the evidence by giving in in the demands of an opposition it had underestimated. The second solution, evidently, has been chosen,

But some questions remain: Are Presi-dent Chun and his longtime ally locked in a struggle lor power? Have the army chiefs given their support in Mr. Roh's initiative? How much weight did Washington carry in urging dialogue with the opposition?
It is too soon to answer these questions.

But if the liberalization process gets under way with Mr. Roh serving as its linchpin, his authority is sure to be greatly enhanced and the middle classes will be tempted to give him their votes, once again isolating the radical wing of the student movement. In this case, the Koreans would have demonstrated a political maturity oo a par with their economic performances.

Moscow Is Serious About Radical Reform A Caution:

DURHAM, North Carolina — The biggest obstacle to Mikhail Gorbachev's sweeping economic reforms is not political ideology but the inexperience of Soviet managers in decentralized, market-oriented planning and management.

To help him de-Stalinize the Soviet Union and open a closed society, Mr. Gorbachev has turned to a sophisticated team of five high-level economic strategists headed by Abel Aganbegyan. Their strategy calls for oothing less than a systematic assault on the centrally planned economy, the self-serving Communist Party, the inflexible bu-reaucracy, the military and the KGB. As one member told me recently, the complete disman-tling of the monolithic Soviet planning agency, Gosplan, "is the only way to save socialism."

This team works closely with the new rector of the Academy for the National Economy, Yevgeni Smirnitsky, to reorient senior-level Soviet bureaucrats to the new way of thinking Ministers, deputy ministers, and heads of the largest enterprises are brought to the Academy for an intense executive development program of seminars, roleplaying and computer gaming. Mr. Smirnitsky said that many of these training sessions are open to the press, and they often result in "stormy, heated debate." Discussion topics include decentralized planning, participatory management, property rights, international trade, economic theory, computer technology and scientifie management.

No one in Moscow claims that this aggressive management development program is a panacea that will eliminate all opposition to Mr. Gorbachev's reforms. Indeed, nothing could be further from the truth. But it does represent a creative attempt to confront the culture of the largest riskfree society in the world.

Soviet managers now have access to a network of private management consultants, including members of Mr. Gorbachev's strategy team, who are being encouraged to gain practical experience by consulting with state-owned enterprises.

Last month, a private American management consulting firm began operations in Moscow amid considerable fanfare in the local press. Soviet economists can now be paid as private consultants to state enterprises and government ministries. From the initial response of economists to these new developments, private management consulting may soons become a high-growth industry in Moscow.

According to Professor Valery Makarov, a key member of the strategy team, additional reforms, even more radical, are on their way, A new law on intellectual property will permit Soviet scientists to earn patent royalties on their inventions. Inventors will be allowed to start their own private businesses or go to work for higher paying Western joint-venture companies that license their inventions. Can it be that Soviet high-tech entreprencurs may be just around the corner?

Leonid Abalkin, the new director of the Institute of Economics, has indicated that starting in January, financial and banking reforms similar to those in Hungary and China will gradually be intro-duced in the Soviet Union over a three-year period. They will include creation of new financial institutions, introduction of capital markets, application for membership in the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund and eventually introduction of flexible exchange rates.

When Mr. Gorbachev repeatedly called for "radical reform" in his Feb. 25 speech to the Communist Party Congress, we were told by American Sovietologists that this was merely political rhetoric and that nothing had changed in Moscow. I believe that Mr. Gorbachev meant exactly what he said. The name of the game is indeed radical reform, and it is no longer in our self-interest to continue pretending otherwise.

The writer, professor of economics and business administration at Duke University, and author of a book on Soviet reform, recently returned from Mos-cow. He contributed this to The New York Times.

Criticizing SDI May Be Popular, but It Isn't Logical

By Gerold Yonas

AN DIEGO - The Strategic De-O fense Initiative was developed to find out if emerging technologies could be used as a way of eliminating or significantly reducing the threat posed by nuclear-tipped ballistic missiles. The plan was, and still is, to develop enough of a factual basis concerning the cost and effectiveness of a defense system so that an toformed decision can be made on whether to proceed with the next logical step: engineering development. So why are we being inundated with editorial opinions expressing the view that SDI cannot work and will bankrupt the country in the process? At a time when Washington is reluctant to match Moscow's commitment to strategic offense, the Soviet Union commues to make large investments in developing and deploy-ing means to protect itself from air and missile attack. With no U.S.deployed missile defense, the future possibility of Soviet strategic superi-ority is of increasing concern.

SDI critics point to the 1972 anti- United States and the Soviet Union. If ballistic missile treaty as a symbol of U.S. commitment to deterrence, not through prosection but through retaliation at lowered levels of offease. But the treaty has never provided the re-ductions in offensive forces that were fundamental to its acceptance. It is becoming less clear that U.S. retaliatory forces and the ABM treaty will continue to deter lesser nuclear attacks, or non-nuclear forms of aggression, or the threats of the same. Would it not be safer to create defenses to deny the military value of a pre-emptive strike, as well as to provide more protection? Would it not be wiser to create real doubt in the mind of an attacker as to the futility of an attack as well as to retain the emphasis on instilling fear of certain and effective retaliation? Obviously this vision of deterrence we agree to put aside the nuclear threat and move to greater reliance on protection, it is possible that the Soviet Unions's munerical advantage in conventional weapons could leave it with other military advantages.

Here again the United States must

The Tyrant Still Lives'

By Flora Lewis

PARIS - A French critic called I the Soviet film "Repentance," which won the special jury prize at the Cannes Film Festival, "socialist surrealism." Indeed it is an intriguing in many ways perplexing and even troubling insight into what is now going on in the Soviet Union.

Mikhail Gorbachev's efforts to move his country away from the deadly, boring flat-footed lies of so-calist realism in the economy will probably have to face some of the eene barriers conjured in the film.

Ostensibly it is the story of Varlam, a tyrannical small-town mayor with a vicious sense of black humor. On his death, torrents of grief gush from his intimidated and mesmerized townspeople. But one woman, whose family was victim of his terror, is determined to expose his evil. Her method is to keep digging up his corpse to heunt his heir, finally forcing the son to recognize the borror on which pride was based.

It is the story of Stalin, told in fantasies and nightmares, filmed in Stalin's native Georgia by a Georgian director, Tengiz Abuladze, with Georgian actors speaking Georgian. After the Cannes festival, it was shown at the Soviet Embassy here, and on the occasion Mr. Abuladze made a point of thanking Eduard Shevardnadze, who was Georgia's Communist Party chief before he became Mr. Gorbachev's foreign minister, for permitting him to make it. That was in the waning days of the Brezimev era. Censors banned release until this year, when it was shown at jammed theaters in Moscow and now in the West by Sovfilmexport.

Technically, it leaves as much to be desired as some other Soviet exports. It is archly arty, with long, heavy silences and dark scenes so literally dark that nothing can be seen. That may be an overreaction to the years of total constraint on aesthetic form, and it seems dated. Some passages are hilarious, the satire is savage, the ending surprisingly carnest.

But it has to be taken in Soviet terms as another revelation of the extraordinary social, psychological, and moral landscape Mr. Gorbachev must shake and move if his attempts at reform are going to get very far.

The director said he was trying to "generalize" his central character, and so gave his dictator Hitler's mustache, Mussolini's black shirt and pouter-pigeon strut, Beria's pince-nez, as well as Stalin's boots and glittering dark eyes. But to Russians, this is not just cinematic pastiche.
As an elderly Soviet political commentator said in Moscow, the suggestion is breathtaking that Russians are invited to see their own defunct dicta-tor in the same light as the fascist leaders who fought their country. To the extent that the Soviet Union has de-Stalinized, it was still never whispered there that the regime had some-thing in common with its enemies. Further, the Russian editor expressed his surprise that the film was than that of its vigorous and rapidly accepted in Georgia, where the Stalin changing technology driven by an open and competitive free world?

But that is worthwhile to belp dissichanges, for buman as well as techno-logical and political reasons, and of the risks for those who want to control change and preserve power. In its fanciful way, this Georgian parable tells more than a Gorbachev speech.

BRUSSELS — Yes, Jacques Delors should resign from his job at the head of the European Community if the EC leaders oow meeting here refuse in heed his warnings. The community is heading for the rocks, and Mr. Delors's resignation ture that could yet save it.

Brussels has been buzzing with speculation about the possibility that Mr. Delors, who has been president of the European Commission for two and a half years, may step down a full 18 months before his term is over. He is reported to have become so angry and frustrated over European governments' refus-al to tackle the EC financial crisis that he is threatenine to quit. It could be that only such shock tactics as a walk-out by the president and some senior members of the European Commission can bring the member states to their senses. The EC Commission is caught in an absurd cross fire. On the ooe hand, member governments berate it for operating a "profligate" com-munity budget that is sinking ever deeper ioto the red, thanks to runaway farm subsidies that absorb about 75 percent of its funds. On the other hand, most EC governments refuse to listen to even the most cautious of the commission's plans for curbing these subsidies. When Mr. Delors took over as president of the commission it was with the intention of putting an end to such nonsense. He gave up his position as fioance minister of EC budget what they put in. Six. France to take the job, and made it months ago he proposed a new fund-

Mr. Delors cut through the traditional baggling over which portfolios should be handled by which commission member. On the basis of ability rather than na-

Mr. Delors's own staff members are playing down the possibility of his resign ing, so this may join the list of five or six previous occasions in his ca-

The Tyron Reagan's Not Angry, Sorry Still Liber Or Shocked, Just Frivolous Anthony Lewis

The state of the s

last weeks, in a way the most extraordinary thing in the Iran-contra hearings is something that has not happened. President Reagan has expressed not a word of outrage at the facts disclosed, not a word of regret.

It was learned that officials of his administration hired private entrepre-teurs to run an important aspect of foreign policy, outside the political sys-tem, outside the law. Senator William Cohen, the Republican from Maine, said the testimony had shown "two govern-ments: one elected, the other procured." But the president was not surprised at this radical departure from the constitution. He was not angry. He was not sorry. Not so far as we know. He said nothing As with that large canvas, so with the grotesque details. A retired general, now a private businesaman, took a group of tranians on a tour of the White House. Among other things, he showed them the Situation Room, where the most secret

U.S. military planning takes place.
To bring uncleared outsiders into the Situation Room, much less representa-tives of a state that proclaims its hostility to the United States, is an astonishing breach of security. But the president was not astonished. Or indignant. Not so far as we know. He said nothing. There are dozens of questions, arising from the hearings, that responsible citizens should want answered and that a responsible president would want to answer. Here are a few.

Mr. President, two of the private individuals acting for your administration, Richard Secord and Albert Hakim, promised Itanian delegations that the United States would go to war if the Soviet Union invaded Iran, and would

Back in the Saddle

R ONALD Reagan seems to be back in the saddle again. He stumbled at the economic summit and is being battered in the Iran-contra hearings, but he is a happier man since returning to the stump to attack "the tax-and-spend crew on Capi-tol Hill." There was fire in his eyes and a lift in his step as he sailed through three speeches in Florida recently. Mr. Reagan is older and more stubborn now. He is a much tougher customer to sell a compromise, for Howard Baker, the White House chief of staff, or for anyone else. On the stump, Mr. Reagan conveys the impression of a secure ideologue who prefers to leave a legacy of intransigent opposition to fiscal compromise rather than that of a president who gets things done. He appears delighted with confrontation when a genuine and useful compromise is at hand. --- Low Connon, writing in .

N EW YORK — With all the bizarre and chilling testimony over these last weeks, in a way the most extraordi-States without consideration by Congress

States without consideration by congress or the responsible executive departments?

You said recently, Mr. President, that there was no "smoking gun" connected with the wrongdoing in the Iran-contra affair. There has been detailed testimonal than I incompany the Colonel Oliver ny that Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North, of your National Security staff, hired outsiders to sell arms to the contras and Iran, to arrange airstrips, buy planes and spend large sums. Are you saying that as president you had no responsibility for any of that? Under the U.S. political system, who was accountable to the people for those activities?

Representative Lee Hamilton the In-Representative Lee Hamilton, the Indiana Democrat who is chairman of the House investigating committee, asked: "Who supervised Colonel North? Who was responsible for U.S. funds earned from the sale of U.S. arms? Who asked whether actions taken were lawful?" Can you answer those questions? Please com-ment, too, on Mr. Hamilton's statement that "accountability requires acceptance of responsibility up the chain of command."

Do you think it is wise, and proper, for U.S. foreign policies to be secretly financed by contributions from foreign policies. tentates? Do you think it is right, and consistent with American ideals, for govexpreent officials to solicit funds from private U.S. citizens to carry on foreign policies forbidden by acts of Congress One American who donated such funds testified that he was told you would personally meet and thank any contributor who gave $300,000 or more you think of that approach?

Colonel North had documents altered and shredded after the Iran-contra affair began to unravel. Why do you think he to send arms to the contras. What do did that? Do you condemn the action? Representative Henry Hyde, a Re-publican from Illinois, said Colonel North and the others had used means that were "wrong and bad and blameworthy" --- but that those means were justified by the end: "the Nicaraguan resistance survived." Do you agree that the end justified the means?

But, Mr. Reagan has not addressed himself to those or other substantive questions raised by the Iran-contra affair, profound questions going to the founda-tions of the U.S. political society. What he has said has seemed early casual, detached from the realities of what happened,

"I get around quite a bit in the coun-y," he said, and "I haven't seen any evidence that I've been mortally wounded, not do the people seem to be unhappy about what we've been doing here." On June 16 he said people were going "back to their favorite television shows."

In frivolousness and personalization, those remarks are reminiscent of what Mayor Edward Koch used to say as he presided over the corruption of New York City's government: "How'm I doing?" The New York Times.

Doll Up a Cabbie, and a Mug's Still a Mug

N EW YORK — When I drove a taxi for two years — through ice storms and incredibly hot, burned nights, from Kennedy Airport to Riverdale — the last thing I worried about was the acceptability of my attire. More pressing concerns: Will I survive? Will an axle fall off this poor excuse for a car? How do you not blow your cool when a Park Avenue lady stiffs you with a nickel tip?

How do you react to a gun at your bead? Now the authorities have proposed a dress code for New York Ciry cab drivers. But isn't the issue this: Who really has to look good enough to drive whom where? Or, isn't the passenger's characteristics. ter as important as the driver's clothes?

Anyway, to underscore the absurdity of a dress code for cabbies, I suggest that they up the stakes a bit. By law, cabbies are required to pick up any rapist or indicted arbitrager and take them to any unlit, deserted alley they desire. Before exposing deserted alley they desire. Before exposing themselves to such risks, why shouldn't cabbies formally inspect passengers?

Are they properly manicured? Are they willing to sign an affidavit that they will leave at least a 20 percent pip? Do they speak the King's English? Perhaps a cabbie can put up a "Jacket Required" sign. If the passenger doesn't have a jacket, the cabbie, for a fee, can supply one.

I would like to think that it is the genteel old money that is behind this dress code. But I suspect that it is the dress code. But I suspect that it is the parvenu Yuppies, with their power ties, alligator shoes and immense, if unwitting, capacity for self-parody. We babyboomers have developed a deep fascination with surface appearances.

When I was a child, my grandfather would bounce me on his knee and impart wisdom through what I then thought were simplistic sayings. One of his favorites: You dress a mug in a suit and what you get is a mug in a suit. That goes for taxi drivers and passengers.

Divergent Views on Waldheim, Austria and the Pope

Kurt Waldheim may not have person-ally committed atrocities, for which he must be revolted by the speciacle. would need to stand trial, but it is beyoud dispute that he was a staff officer with military units engaged in the depor-tation of Jews to death camps. At the very least, Mr. Waldheim was more concerned about staying out of trouble than he was about the fate of his fellow men. Millions of people behaved in 'this shameful and cowardly manner —this is what made the Holocaust possible and it is evident that cowardice, opportunism and callousness, by themselves, cannot be treated as crimes. But there is a great difference between not prosecuting such a man and elevating him to the highest post one's country has to offer or honoring and praising him at a papal audience in the Vatican. At the very least, Mr. Waldheim's conduct during World War II was shameful; he himself has confirmed this by lying about it. Those who defend and praise him today, including the pope, appear to suggest that being even an takes nothing away from a man's honor. I write this to contradict Mr. Waldheim's claim in interviews and press conferences that "it is always the same people" (and by implication, always the same Jews) who protest when he is bonored as one of the first citizens of the world, All decent persons who have the Born and raised a Catholic, I wish to protest at the pope's embrace of Mr. Waldheim; it's not only as an insult to the Jewish victims of Nazism but a libel of all Catholics, of whom the pope is the symbolic representative. More Catholics of conscience should be heard from. It is a disgrace that Jews are not in a minority among the voices raised against Mr. Waldheim and the papal audience.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of Israel, and now many American Catholics, are condemning Pope John Paul II's decision to grant an audience to President Waldheim of Austria. I am not a member of either religion, nor am I a fan of Mr. Waldheim's, but I would like to applaud the pope's decision, and encourage others consider following his example.

Whatever the pope's reasons - and dging from his past efforts I am willing to assume they are both burnane and legitimate - it seems to me that the time for ending communications with those with whom we disagree is long past. Why do we respond by stopping the activity that offers the most hope for understanding and reconciliation?

It has often been said that the Austrians would like the world to believe Hitler was German and Beethoven an Austrian. There will never be an exorcism of this particular Austrian demon of anti-Semitism, which produced Hitlers and Eichmanns, until Mr. Waldheim publicly refers to his service in the German Army for what it really was: not just the duty of a mobilized soldier but the repulsive role be played, if only a modest one, in serving his criminal masters to Berlin.

The Austrians I know are a far cry from that segment of the population that voted for a president who feels neither shame nor guilt for what happened in the Balkans. We are not confronting a polincal but a moral dilemma. Nearly 50 percent of the Austrians voted against Mr. Waldheim, Les this not be forgotten, either. Men like former Chancellor Fred Sinowatz and Chancellor Franz Vranitzky cannot be identified with this linger-Austrian disease of anni-Semitism which is the true hallmark of Nazism and has little to do with fascism.

AIDS Isn't a Heart Disease

It is clear that to his opinion column, "In the Drive Against AIDS, Why Pledge a Blank Check?" (June 16), Charles Krauthammer is trying very hard to appear at least somewhat compassionate toward victims and potential victims of this disease. But in writing that AIDS requires the collaboration of the sufferers he forgets that most of the afflicted were ignorant of the existence of the virus when they contracted the illness, In his aloofness he forgets, too, that he is consigning a not insignificant proportion of the population to a lifetime of celibacy. But what is much more important is that as a thinking person, he cannot ask us to consider AIDS in the same category as the other illnesses he mentions: brain cancer, heart disease. AIDS is contagious. It is clearly an epidemic. Protecting human beings against the alarming spread of AIDS must be a public concern far beyond the charvin-istic issues of sexual preference. Although Mr. Krauthammer might consider himself a non-risk case, be and other complacent individuals must immediately understand that because the disease is contagious, like polio or rabies, the lives of millions of sexually active people are endangered regardless of their orientation. It is just this attitude that kept the U.S. government from concerning itself with the disease six years ago, when, with a determined effort, its expansion might have been arrested and tens of thousands of lives would have been saved. RICHARD de COMBRAY.

NYSE Mixed, Dow Advances

Stock Exchange closed mixed Monday in modrate trading.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 10.05 to close at 2.446.91. Declines led advances by about an 8-7 ratio. The NYSE composite index rose 0.32 to 172.99. The average share price was up 8 cents. Volume was 142.5 million shares, down from 150.5 million sbares traded Friday. Traders said program buying lifted the blue chips in the final half-hour of trading. In a generally dull market, oil issues stood out as gainers after the weekend agreement on output by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Ron Doran, senior equity trader at First Albany Corp., called it a "lackadaisical" market and said he expected it to remain quiet for the rest of the week. Many traders and portfolio so anagers are taking off the week before the long holiday weekend, he said, Markets will be closed Friday. He said the market, with soany players absent, would probably show little reaction Tuesday to the index of leading U.S. indicators unless it is far out of line. Analysts estimated the gain in May indicators at 0.6 percent. Although the market opened lower after Friday's declines, it soon turned higher. Analysts said the three oil components of the Dow average supported the index's early gains. Texaco rose 1½ to 39%, Exxon climbed 2% to 93% and Chevron advanced 1 to 61 is.

INTERNATIONAL STOCK MARKETS

Oslo Prices Are Expected To Stay Firm This Summer

By JURIS KAZA

- Prices will remain firm on the Oslo Stock Exchange during the summer doldrums typical of Nor-dic markets and the exchange will continue to offer some of the best bargains internationally, according to analysts in Norway and abroad. With domestic interest rates expected to fall later in the year, analysts feel that the market could receive further impulse from domestic buyers.

In the medium to longer term, the Oslo Exchange may offer options trading and a fully computerized trading floor, according to officials. The average price-earnings ratio here is 9 or 9.5, which means we have relatively better prices than on foreign markets," said Olaug J.

Foreign demand appears to be at record levels.

for Norwegian shares

Svarva, a financial analyst at Den norske Creditbank, Norway's largest commercial Measured by the Oslo Stock Exchange index, share prices were up nearly 20 percent from a year ago.

Ms. Svarva said that foreign demand, spurred by higher oil prices, had largely been behind the advance on the Oslo market, with domestic investors favoring the bond market. That market is closed to foreigners.

foreign demand for Norwegian shares appears to be at record levels. Many companies are close to closing their books to additional foreign ownership under the limits imposed by Norwegian law, which range from 10 percent foreign ownership in the case of banks to 40 percent in that of shipping companies.

Rolf Grung, another Den norske Creditbank analyst, said foreign trading accounted for around 40 percent of the daily stock-exchange turnover during winter and spring. "That, however, is mostly Norsk Hydro and Norsk Data," he explained.

N LONDON, Tim Youngman, an analyst with Savory, Milln Ltd., said that in the short term the Oslo stock market would have a quiet holding period. A favorable development, according to him, was a decision by the Norwegian government not to push for a 2 percent turnover tax on share trading.

There is some concern about another proposal that would put the stock exchange under a government-appointed board rather than its present status as a nonprofit foundation run by a committee of business and industry representatives. The proposal also would shift responsibility for the exchange to the Ministry of Finance from the Ministry of Trade.

The Oslo Exchange has been active in calling for stronger penalties on insider trading. According to Mr. Froensdal, the maximum penalty of a year in prison is low compared to penalties for theft and burglary.

On the other hand, he said, Norway's insider law is one of the broadest in the region, covering all persons who have access to confidential, market-affecting information.

The exchange also has shown its teeth in the past year by delisting VIP International, a video and media company.

Asked about potentially interesting Norwegian shares, the Den norske Creditbank analysts pointed to Hafslund, a power utility that recently acquired Nycomed. Also mentioned was Simrad Subsea, a maker of underwater detection equipment.

Mr. Grung pointed to Saga Petroleum as an oil company with large proven reserves and a recent discovery of petroleum traces in its concession area in the Barents Sea.

Mr. Youngman said be was looking for shares in companies that had considerable asset backing. One example was Aker-Norcem, the recently merged construction and offshore group that has been developing waterfront real estate in Oslo.

He said Boregaard, the conglomerate, also was starting to look good with a fresh management team and having sold off a lot of unprofitable businesses.

On the Boers 2, Norway's equivalent of an over-the-counter market, Mr. Grung and Ms. Svarva said there could be opportunities in two oil-exploration companies, Norsk Polar Navigasjon and Norsk Vikingolje.

U.S. Sales Of Homes Plummet

14.9% Drop Is 5-Year Record

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatche WASHINGTON — U.S. sales f new homes plunged 14.9 percent May from April, the biggest drop in more than five years, as the me-dian price exceeded $100,000, the government said Monday.

Many financial analysis had expected a slowdown in single-family home sales because of higher mortgage rates, but the size of last month's decline came as a surprise.

The Commerce Department also said that new-home sales in April were less robust than it had previously thought. It said April sales rose 1.0 percent, instead of 7.6 percent as reported last month.

The May decline brought newhome sales to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 616,000, the lowest rate since December 1984.

The May drop was the largest since January 1982, when home sales fell 19.5 percent. While sales fell, the cost of a new home rose sharply. The average price was $129,600 in May, up from 117.500 in April. The preliminary estimate on the median price for a new home — the point at which half of all homes cost more and half less — broke the $100,000 mark to reach $106,800. That compared with $97,900 in April and $92,100 in May of last

That barrier also was pierced in January and March, but each time the figure was revised to below $100,000.

Through May, the number of homes actually sold in 1987 totaled 314,000, down 13.5 percent from the first five months of 1986.

Fixed-rate mortgages shot up from an average of 9.3 percent in April to as high as 10.81 percent the week of May 22. (Reuters, UPI)

Norway Welcomes Oil Pact, Plans to Extend Output Cuts

Allis-Chalmers Seeks Protection From Creditors compiled by Our Stall From Disputches

MILWAUKEE - Allis-Chalmers Corp_ the former farm-equipment giant that has struggled for two years to put itself on sound footing, said Monday that it was filing for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bank-ruptcy Code.
Allis-Chalmers, once one of the leading U.S. makers of farm and beavy machinery, said the filing ap-plied only to its domestic operations. Its foreign subsidiaries. which accounted for almost half its $771 million in sales last year, are not affected, it said.

Allis-Chalmers designs, manufactures and markets equipment for handling fluids, such as pumps; for processing solids in mining, and for air quality control. It bas about 9,400 employees worldwide. In March, the company announced plans to sell all its businesses except the profitable air filters operations. It presented a restructuring plan to sbarebolders, lenders and union representatives on March 4. It said rapid agreement on the plan was essential.

But on Monday, the company said an agreement could not be worked out in time and it had chosen the only practical alternative; seeking protection in court. lts chairman, Wendell F. Bueche, said the company would continue to do business. In April, Allis-Chalmers reached a definitive agreement to sell its mining machinery division to Boliden AB, the Swedish group, for about $90 million. The company had sold most of its farm-equipment business to Klockner-Humboldi-Deutz AG of West Germany in 1985, effectively ending the major role it had played in that field since the early 1900s. Since then, its operations have been split about evenly between the air filters division and the solid materials processing units. Financial difficulty began in the cash flow was $2 million sbort. Trading of Allis-Chalmers's stock was delayed Monday morning on the New York Stock Exchange. Once trading began, it fell 75 cents to close at $1,125. (Rewers, AP)

Trade Surplus Grew in May in West Germany

WIESBADEN, West Germany — The surplus on current account widened in May in a provisional 7.5 billion Deutsche marks ($3.34 billion) from an upward revised 6.1 billion DM in April, the Federal Statistics Office said Monday. Economists bad expected hat the sharp appreciation of the mark against the dollar would have started to bite into West Germany's exports and depress the trade surplus.

However, the statistics office said that the merchandise trade surplus expanded to a provisional 10.6 billion DM in May from 8.9 billion in April The office had originally posted a 5.8 billion DM surplus on the April current account, a trade measure ibat includes nonmerchandise items such as services as well as merchandise.

Exports in May were 43.31 illion DM, down 1.4 percent from April. Imports were 32.76 hillion DM, down 6.5 percent.

SEC to Back Appeal in Texaco Case

NEW YORK - The Securities and Exchange Commission said Monday that it would ask the Texas Supreme Court to hear a key aspect of Texaco Inc.'s appeal of the multibillion-dollar judgment it was ordered to pay Pennzoil Co.

The SEC said its general counsel Daniel L. Goelzer, stated in a letter to Texaco dated June 26 that the commission would file a brief arging the court to review Texaco's contention that Pennzoil violated federal securiues regulations in its agreement to merge with Getty Oil Co. in 1984.

Pennzoil's stock fell $4 Monday on the New York Stock Exchange, to close at $78.875, while Texaco gained $1.625 cents, to $39.50, after the move was made public.

If the court decides to hear the appeal and Texaco's contention is upbeld, a 1985 state jury award of more than $10 billion to Pennzoil could be invalidated. Pennzoil contends that Texaco wrongly interfered with its Getty merger.

Dollar Steady, Pound Slips in Sell-Off

NEW YORK — The dollar edged higher Monday in very quiet, thin trading with market participants forecasting a continuation of the current narrow range.

"This should be a relatively quiet week," said Jody Foulks, an analyst with the Harris Bank in Chicago. "There is very good support at 1.5150 to 1.5180 Deutsche marks."

In New York at the close, the dollar firmed to 1.8285 Deutsche marks from 1.8270 at Friday's close; to 146.70 yen from 146.35; to 6.1015 French frames from 6.0965, and to 1.5205 Swiss frames from 1.5255.

It also gained against the weaker British pound, which closed at $1.6005, against $1.6111. Earlier the dollar was steady in European markets. The pound ended sharply lower after a puzzling

The dollar also gained on the pound in London, which closed at $1.6005, compared with $1.6110. Dealers and analysis were surprised at Monday's weak performance by the pound, which ended in London at 71.8 on its tradeweighted index, down 4 points from last Friday, and at 2.9280 protect its $18 a barrel price. But none of those factors impressed traders in Singapore and Australia, who London dealers assumed were behind the overnight selling that wiped a cent off the pound. They said the reason for the selling was unclear, but that ster-ling showed no inclination to correct the trend in lifeless trading.

In earlier European trading, the dollar was fixed in Frankfurt at 1.8280 DM, a slight firming from 1.8257 at Friday's fixing, and in Paris at 6.0980 French francs, upi from 6.0900. It closed in Zurich at 1.5197 Swiss francs, up from (Rewers, UPI)

Bank of France Reduces 2 Key Interest Rates

PARIS -- The Baok of France on Monday cut two key interest rates by a quarter of percentage point, a spokesman for the central bank said. The intervention rate, which the bank uses to set the floor for money market rates, was reduced to 7.5 perceot and the seven-day repurchase rate was cut to 8 percent, he said. For most of the last half of 1986, the intervention rate was at 7 percent. But it was raised in two stages to 8 percent in mid-December and early January, in parallel with increases in the repurchase rate, as the tumbling dollar and rising Deutsche mark pressured the franc.

A realignment of European Monetary System currencies in January relieved some of the pressure on the franc. The intervention rate was cut a quarter point in March.

"The basis of winning has shifted from price to quality and product and, unfortunately, MCI created an image in the marketplace early on that it was oot the quality product but it was the cheapest product," said Robert Morris 3d, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Se-curities. "US Sprint has created in the marketplace the perception of the difference in product.

Mr. Morris said the best alternative is a merger with US Sprint, an idea he said MCI found intriguing. In conversations, they have illuminated for me the benefits of a merger, which include complimentary customer bases, expanded customer base and a back-up in the

MCI: The Long-Distant Second Is Trying to Hold the Line Against US Sprint

On the company side of the equation, MCI cut its work force 16 percent last year - down to 13,700 - to trim costs. About 20 percent of the cuts were employees of Satellite Business Systems, a business communications compa ny that was purchased from IBM in exchange for a 16.7 percent stake in MCl, estimates Mr. Roberts, MCI's president. MCI also announced a $500 million write-off to account for outmoded technology that it is replac-ing and a reduction in annual capital spending from more than $900 million to less than $800 million. The company will reduce in-ternal costs to 25.7 percent by the end of this year from 36 percent of revenue in 1984.

According to Mr. Roberts, the company, which has about 1 million business customers, wants to expand the services it offers large

MC1 has been taking advantage of its relationship with IBM, marketing its services in tandem with IBM products to a handful of very large customers who request it, be said. MCI officials say the IBM connection is giving them vital experience with data communications, an area that is growing four times faster than voice communica

MCI has also been introducing cheaper bulk long-distance offerings that provide more precise billing, as well as private network services and toll-free "800" service. MCI now offers international longdistance service to 55 countries, compared with AT&Ta 180.

But analysts say that MCl cannot be all things to all people and that part of its problem has been too wide a reach.

"Are they going to be a quality service provider to large businesses or a cut-rate provider of voice services only?" asked Fritz Ringling, an analyst with Booz Allen & Hamilton. "They can't be everything to everybody. They have to define the market and that's what they've

High-Flying Markets Worry Bank of Japan product, the Bank of Japan said in

TOKYO - The Bank of Japan is increasingly worried that high-fly-ing financial markets will crash, sources at the bank said Monday. "We're afraid that someday the bble will burst and that the deflationary impact on the economy will be very disastrous," one source

. The central bank reportedly has embarked on a delicate policy. It must attempt to deflate speculation that has pumped up prices without bursting the bubble.

The Nikkei 225-share stock market index plunged 393.31 points Monday to close at 24,509.41, extending the sharp declines of earlier this month as the market speculated that interest rates would rise.

The Bank of Japan bought 100 billion yen ($683 million) in certificates of deposit via repurchase agreements Monday as an indication of its determination to maintain an easy money policy, central the economy if the prices of exist-ing assets collapsed," the Bank of Japan said earlier this month in its annual economic report.

Snch a possibility bas been heightened by what the bank sees as excessive speculation in stock, bond and land prices.

Over the past two years the market average has doubled, driving price/earnings ratios over 70 com-pared with about 15 on Wall Street. Bond yields have dropped sharply. Land prices in Tokyo have soared.

The excessive speculation means the markets are increasingly out of touch with economic reality and thus more vulnerable, one bank source said. A collapse now could rob businessmen and consumers of what little confidence they have in the economy after the yen-induced recession of the past year. "There seems to be an accelerated demand for money to support transactions in shares, bonds, land and other existing assets which has little bearing on value added and therefore on GNP," gross national its report.

The increased inclination of investors to seek capital gains and the accompanying rise in prices of existing assets could have dangerous implications, it added.

In the bank's view, a major reason behind skyrocketing prices was its own easy monetary policy and the belief that interest rates are heading lower.

Mindful of the potential inflationary dangers posed by excessive biquidity, the bank's board recently decided it had to spell out clearly to the markets that a further discountrate cut was not in the offing, but the bank had to do that without tightening monetary policy and risking a market collapse.

This was achieved partly by a rise in short-term interest rates. In the longer run, the bank is counting on a gradual upturn in the economy to draw liquidity from the financial markets into productive areas like capital spending, one Bank of Japan economist said.

THE BURGER YEARS: Rights and Wrongs in the Supreme Court 1969-1986

> T HE prevailing view in 1969, a view feared by some and applauded by many, was that the creators of the Burger court — Richard Nixon and his attorney general, John Mitchell - wanted the court to wage judicial counterinsurgency. That the Burger court defied such expectations and instead carved an independent niche, often unrelated to the Warren court legacy it was supposed to attack, is the undoubted fact of 1987.

> To the extent that events confounded prediction, the court under Warren E. Burger bore witness to an old truth, amusingly phrased by Laurence Tribe: "Whoever lives by the crystal ball soon learns to eat ground glass." This has been true of most attempts over the years to steer the court along a predetermined political path, or to predict what it would do.

> The present volume originated as a symposium in The Nation magazine. Hence most of these pieces carry a heavy flavoring of Nation doctrine — a presumption that "right" decisions sympathize with the claims of minorities and unions, favor scrupulous regard for due process (liberally interpreted) and are solici-tous of the mentally ill, the physically handi> capped and prisoners.

> Given these presumptions, it is no surprise that most of the contributors find the Burger

court more often wrong than right. It is charged for instance, with constricting accerto the courts, diluting the antitrust laws and it. various ways eroding the protections of the Bin of Rights. But even when artfully masked in jurisprudential theory, ethically judgmental categories are unsatisfactory for analyzing Supreme Court work. This is especially true of the Burger court, whose overall record is nothing if not pragmatic.

This political advocacy dressed as judicial analysis produces a collection that is perhaplonger on complaint than seems strictly justified. There are exceptions, but in general the finding is that, when the Burger court did address the issues agitated by Nixon in the 1968 campaign, it retreated from the Warren court's positions, though not so far as liberals feared.

The Burger court in the early and mid! softened the Miranda warning requirements with "good faith" and "public safety" exceptions. But as Yale Kamisar notes, as recently as 1986 there were six votes for the proposition that Miranda "embodies a carefully crafted balance designed to fully protect boin the defendants' and society's interests." This was not exactly a ringing endorsement, but it was far more supportive of the Miranda rules than the Warren-court bashing of 1966-69 might have led one to expect.

Meanwhile, the Burger court broke new ground. It upheld cross-busing for school inte-gration. The abortion decision pushed outward boundaries of constitutional privacy. The 14th Amendment was found to hold previously unnoted implications for sexual equality. On capital punishment and press law the Burger court reached holdings that did oot displease liberals, though in the former matter it did oot take the hoped-for step of abolition and in the latter the result was a bit ambiguous.

In one of the more original contributions, Denniston argues that in press law the Sullivan libel precedent of 1964 led toward a sort of trap. The "malice" test, which emphasized the journalist's state of mind at the time the defamation occurred, has been held to permit various intrusive inspections of the thoughts, files and working notes of reporters and editors. Denniston leaves us with a question mark as to where the Sullivan doctrine is taking us.

As perspective deepens, the Burger court will almost certainly be viewed as a tempering factor, at a time when the political trend was distinctly reactive.

Ebell Bowl who gave the commencement speech at Luna Lake Tech, was one of thousands of speakers whn admitted he made a Buchwald mistake. We discussed it at a sidewalk cafe on Cape Cod, waiting for coffee that never came. "I should have told the class of 1987 that their generation owes it to our generation to provide the basic services that we all need, and I don't mean genetic engineering." "It doesn't count for a kid to climb the ladder of success if no one can get a cup of coffee," I said.

Ebell looked at me. "My message to the graduating class should have been that none of us can enjoy the American dream if young people will not carry away our dirty dish-

Tales of Detention in South Africa

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The first time he was detained in prison, for three months, he sometimes wondered what he did to get arrested. But the second time, he told himself, it was simply fate. When it happens for a second time, I wouldn't say it's better," Pule Nape says, "but in South Africa, whether you do something or not, it's inevitable you're going to be arrested. It's like getting shot. Whether you've been in volved in a demonstration or not you're going to get shot."

Nape — who has not been shot - says all this in careful, clipped English; an unemployed, high-school-educated black South African, be has the manners and articulateness of a graduate studeut. "I'm a reader by nature," he says. He is 22 years old.

"Don't say 22 years nid," he says with a smile. "Say 22 years oppressed."

Name and two other young men are among 14 South Africans who were hrought here by the Law-yers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law to take part in a symposium at the Rayburn House Office Building on South African children in detention. The idea is that when the issue of detention and torture of South African children and vouths comes up, "nobody on the Hill should be able to say they didn't hear about it." explains Gay McDougall, an attorney and the director of the Southern Africa Project of the Lawyers' Committee.

The Lawyers' Committee contends — based on information culled from reports by private South African human rights monitoring groups, including the Detainees Parents Support Committee - that 10,000 of the 25,000 people detained under the state of emergency in South Africa in the last year have been children under the age of 18. The group also says that of the estimated 5,000 people now held, 1,000 are children. While detained, says McDougall, virtually none of them are ever charged," and they are often as-"I gave them a false address and a false name and they released me after six bours," says Tshahalala. Both Nape and Makhoba have been involved in protest politics Nape in a youth organization, Makhoba in school politics, and their thetoric is sophisticated. Both say they have not been involved in violent activities such as stoning or burning. But Makhoba offers an impassioned and painstaking defense of youths who have taken to violence, citing the repressiveness they endure in an apartheid system and the frustration they feel at being able to do little about it. "What is happening in our country is a product of the system," he says.

All these fellows are involved in legal political opposition," says Audrey Coleman, a white South African who helped found Detainees Parents Support Committee in 1981 when one of her sons was detained for five months. hardly an innocent to the ways of Our government promotes the idea that people who are detained are involved in storing, burning. We're all involved in legal activity.

The South African government denies virtually all of the allega-tions about children's detention made by the Lawyers' Committee. "It's absolutely ridiculous," says Eli Bitzer, the South African embassy first secretary. The latest figures are that 11 children under the age of 16" are being detained in South Africa, and "they've been charged with very serious crimes - like necklacing," a form of political retribution in which the victim burns to death with a gasoline-filled tire

On June 11, 1986 - the day before a new state of emergency was declared — Patrick Makhoba says he was with six friends on the grounds of his high school in Soweto when the police appeared. "We had no way of running," he remembers. "They were every-where. The school was surrounded. I couldn't believe so many people would come for seven little boys. I was 16."

came in and said, Tack your bags and go." I did it but I didn't show any happiness. I thought, 'I'm not going to believe it.' And I didn't believe it until I got to my mother's house."

Pule Nape, who had been involved in sudent protests, says his first direct encounter with the police was at 4 in the morning as he slept at a friend's house in August 1985. He spent three months in a communal cell: "It-accommodates 36." He remembers two 9-year-olds. "When I saw those kids cry in the cell, it was the worst thing. A 9-year-old has to cry. He wants his mother. You want to help, but you're in no position to help. You need to be comforted.

Nape was released threemonths after he was detained. They just came with forms and read our names," he says.

The next year, on June 11, 1986, after a friend had been shot and killed, be went to the friend's home to try to find out what had happened. He was arrested standing outside the house. The second time, he says, "they would give you threats: This state of emer-gency is going to last for years, you'll rot in this prison."

Nape spent a three months in solitary confinement at Morningside Prison outside of Johannesburg, followed by seven months in a communal cell in Johannesburg Prison. Interrogations, he says, took place at any hour of the day or might. "I suffered from mental stress," Nape says. "I had severe headaches and loss of appetite. I'm a thin person but ! went from bad to worse."

He was hospitalized for a month in Johannesburg under prison guard. "When I was in the hospital my mother passed away," he says. "I was not given asion to go and see her buried." But after several weeks in the bospital, he was released.

Now, two months out of prison, be says, "I'm still trying to catch up on the outside world." He believes he could be detained again at any moment. But he plans to return. "It's going to be impossible for me to leave South Africa," he says. "I'm going to stay in the country of my birth and fight for it."
